John Lithgow enlivens the timeless poem of “The Owl and the Pussycat” who embark on a journey to find happiness. Susan Sarandon brings to life Robert Frost’s poem, “Stopping By Woods On a Snowy Evening”. Meanwhile, “pages” in Dad’s imagination have come to life, and it’s up to “The Young Detectives” to help find the lost writer in his tangled words. Finally, the hero of this film in rhymed verse goes beyond what is expected of him and a sweet surprise is in store. Compare and contrast – what do these film versions of poems, folktales and stories have to tell us about new outlooks?

Films from England, Germany, Hungary, Norway and the US.
